"Does the Law Create a Tax Which Must Be Deemed a Tax on Real Estate?"

SUPREME COURT IS CROWDED.

Second Day of the Rehearing Began with Mr. Whitney in the Midst el His Remarks.

WASHINGTON, May 7-The second day Cases in the Supreme Court of the United States to-day began with As-United States to-day began with Assistant Attorney-General Whitney it nidst of his argument for a rever sal of the former opinion of the Cour the question of the validity of Federal tax on incomes derived from

All the seats on the bench were again upled to-day, as on yesterday, and visitors crowded the limited space of the court-room, as they have done ore the Court, though not to as great an extent as on yesterday.

Mr. Whitney began by explaining tha ised yesterday had not reached him from the printer, and said that he had already gone almost as far nito the glish precedents orally and in giving various words and phrases used it taxations words and phrases used in taxation.

The opposition seemed to hold that a question must go forward or back according to the views of the occupants of the bench at the particular time in which the question was raised. The opposition had gained much applause from the public on the supposition that their motto was that a thing was never decided until it was decided rightly.

He falled to see how Congress could attempt to legislate if it could not rely upon the permanency of decisions once made by the Supreme Court. Certainly it must have the assurance in attempting to levy taxes that the definitions of the Court were to be adhered to.

Mr. Whitney was followed, at 229 o'clock, by Attorney-General Olney, who said:

"The present positive of the cover."

o'clock, by Attorney-General Olney, who said:

"The present posture of the case I conceive to be this. The contention of the Government at the former hearing was that the validity of a general Income Tax law cound not now be drawn in question, being conclusively settled by repeated adjudications of this court, as well as by the uniform and long-continued practice of the other departments of the Government.

"That contention has been sustained, though by an equally divided court, with two exceptions. One relates to the ignome of the State and municipal se-of the State and municipal sewith two exceptions. One relates to the income of the State and numicipal securities and presents a question upon which I do not ask to be reheard at this time. The other relates to rents of real estate, in respect of which the position of the Court is that they are not embraced within the scope of the previous decisions.

"This conclusion is one of which I precise question. It is not whether there inay not be a tax on rents, which must be deemed to be a tax on land producing them. It is not whether a land tax, incasured by rents or rental value, may not be the most efficient and most scientific way of taxing land. The question is, does this Income Tax law create a tax which is necessarily to be deemed a tax on real estate.

formation is of course the statute itself. The most superficial examination shows that no real estate tax as such is intended by Congress. If it had been, there would have been a provision for the appraisement, by rental value or otherwise, of vacant and unproductive land. If it had been, there would have been provision for the appraisement, by rental value or otherwise, of houses and grounds which are occupied as homesteads and for purposes of private enjoyment and pleasure.

The owner of vacant, unproductive lands held for investment or speculation, whether they be city lots or thousands of unimproved acres, pays nothing under this law on account of such lands. The millionaire, with a half a million dollar massion in the city and an equality cost. If residence by the seashore, pays nothing under this law. The manufacturer or the railroad corporation, the very basis of whose business is the interest in the real estate occupied and used therefor, pays nothing under this law on account of such real estate.

"It is impossible to contend, therefore, that this law contemplates real estate as such, as the subject of the tax imposed by it. If there could be a possible doubt on that point, it is excluded by the sensing of the tax imposed by it. If there could be a possible doubt on that point, it is excluded by the sensing of the tax imposed by it. If there could be a possible doubt on that point, it is excluded by the sensing of the tax imposed by it. If there could be a possible doubt on that point, it is excluded by the sensing the property and so carefully is the distinction observed that when the clause imposing the since to the assistant was a such as the subjects of the tax imposed by it. If there could be a possible doubt on that point, it is excluded by the sensing the property acquired by gift for inheritance.

It was also said that they had some little talk about the

that they had some little talk about the case.

Counsel in the case held a whispered conversation with Justice Andrews, and it was decided to postpone the trial pending an investigation.

Fallon was called upon for an explanation by Justice Andrews when the Court convened after recess. He denied that he had gone to visit Wessman last night. He was on another mission, he said, and met Wessman at Twenty-eighth street and Fifth avenue and asked Wessman to take a drink. He said he thought Wessman was one of the counsel in the case, but denied having talked to him about the suit.

Justice Andrews said that under the circumstances he would excuse Fallon from duty and discharge the jury. Counsel was instructed to draw up an order setting forth the facts and citing Fallon to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of Court.
